Ndungane fears for Constitution

RIGHT-thinking and morally just South Africans must be vigilant against threats to the Constitution, former Cape Town archbishop Njongonkulu Ndungane said on Thursday.

He said the country’s constitutional democracy was being threatened by “ominous signs”, including proposed legislation.

“These threats include legislation such as the so-called secrecy bill, the SAPS amendment bill, the legal practice bill and the traditional courts bill,” Ndungane said.

Ndungane was speaking at the University of the Witwatersrand, where he was awarded an honorary doctorate of literature.
