

Gay killings task team makes arrest

Suspect has apparently already confessed to one murder

SHAIN GERMANER

JUST days after the formation of a task team to investigate the murders of eight gay men across Gauteng, a man has been arrested over one of the killings.

The 29-year-old was arrested in Orlando on Friday morning for the murder of Siphwe Nhlapo, who was found bound and strangled in his Kliepfontein apartment in September last year. Nhlapo, 36, was one of eight men killed in Gauteng in similar circumstances over the past two years.

VICTIM: Siphwe Selby Nhlapo

According to provincial police spokesman Lieutenant-Colonel Lungelo Dlamini, another man suspected of killing Nhlapo is yet to be arrested.

The 29-year-old was due to appear in the Protea Magistrate's Court today in connection with the murder.

According to a source close to the investigation, the man is said to have confessed to Nhlapo's killing, as well as other crimes. But it is unclear if the man is in any way related to the other seven deaths over the past two years.

When The Star originally reported on the first four deaths in October last year, the police said there was no reason to believe there were links between the crimes.

However, four further deaths were uncovered in the intervening months. They each involved gay men murdered in similar ways – all were found bound and murdered in their homes.

The latest victim, theatre manager Rulov Senekal, was found bound and suffocated in his home on February 26 after a meeting with two men in his apartment the night before.

Police have CCTV footage of the two men leaving the building. They appear to have taken with them a laptop and a plastic bag with some other goods. Manolis Veloudos was the first to be killed, in April 2010. His death was followed in 2011 by the deaths of Jim Cathels, Oscar O'Hara, 33, an unnamed landlord. In September, Nhlapo and Barney van Heerden, 39, were found dead.

HIV activist Jason Wasseenaar was murdered in his home in December and Senekal was found dead last month.

Another gay man has also gone missing. Thebe Mogamisi had met a potential love interest online late last year, and travelled from Bloemfontein to Joburg to meet a man known only as Siphon on New Year's Eve.

Mogamisi's family last heard from him on December 31, when he said he would finally be meeting his new friend in person. That was the last his family and friends heard from him.

'Intersexions' steals the limelight with 11 awards

STAFF REPORTER

IT WAS glitz and glamour at Gallagher Estate on Saturday, when the South African Film and Television Awards (Saftas) were handed to the country's top actors, actresses and behind-the-scenes crews.

As television stars were honoured for their acting skills, it was the TV series Intersexions that stole the show, scooping 11 Golden Horns.

The series explores the stereotypes surrounding HIV/Aids and contracting the HI virus.

Among the stars who shone brightly was The Wild's Tumisho Masha, who tweeted after his win: "Thank u thank u! It feels so good to win best actor in a soap!"

Rolie Nikiwe, who won an award for his direction of Intersexions, said: "It felt great. It

(the awards) was important on two levels.

"It's important to say to everyone involved – well done. It's the best performance in a long time in South Africa that came out of Intersexions. It's not just an ordinary drama series but one that deals with the HIV pandemic in South Africa. It was important to have people dialogue it. It's amazing to have the industry recognise us."

The series deals with the concept of six degrees of separation and how we are all interlinked, making it easy for most people to contract the virus.

"As a creative director I was... not sure we had enough actors to fill all 26 episodes, but we made individually amazing episodes. We've got so much talent in terms of acting in South Africa that we didn't have any problems," Nikiwe said.

The team are already working on Intersexions Two, which is expected to hit the screens some time next year.

Below is a list of the big winners of the day:

One in three Soweto teen girls has weight problem

THANDI SKADE

ONE IN every three teenage girls in Soweto is either overweight or obese, while another study found that one in every five rural teenage girls is overweight, according to a study conducted by the Medical Research Council and Wits Development Pathways for Health Research Unit.

Less than 20 percent of 13-year-old teenagers took a packed lunch to school, while about 85 percent of participants bought food from their school tuckshop.

Scientific researcher and first author of the study Alison Feeley says teens who bring a packed lunch to school generally eat healthier items, including cheese, brown or whole-wheat bread, fruit juice and fruit.

A stark contrast to the sweets, crisps, cold drink, fried chips and white bread which accounted for 62 percent of tuckshop purchases.

The study followed 1 450 adolescents between the ages of 13 and 17 and found that children ate more snack items as they grew older and fewer teens ate breakfast.

A separate cross-sectional study found that 17-year-olds ate fast food items at least seven times a week, with the "kota" proving the most popular item.

At just R9, the kota – a quarter loaf of white bread with "slap" chips, cheese, processed meats and sauces – is affordable for teenagers on a tight budget, but a composition analysis showed that an average kota contains around 5 369kJ, and 52g of fat, of which 13g is saturated fatty acids.

This is more than 50 percent of the recommended daily intake of 10 000kJ. The kota contained 2 280mg of salt, a quarter of the 6g maximum salt intake requirement.

Research conducted locally and abroad shows that children have already established good or bad eating habits before they even start primary school.

"Adolescents do not change their eating habits as they grow up. If they started off with bad eating habits, that sets the scene for later on in life" Feeley says.

Obese people are at an increased risk of suffering from cardiovascular disease and developing type 2 diabetes at an accelerated pace.

Paediatric dietician Deborah Jacobson says South Africans have adopted a "very American way of being", including an increase in restaurant portion sizes.

Gabi Steenkamp, a registered dietician, says that getting your children to eat fruit and vegetables daily had to be established from when a baby is first introduced to solid foods – and getting them to eat these should not be a negotiation.

WHAT PARENTS SAY

● Lesego Modibedi packs her son Lethogonolo, 6, a sandwich made with brown bread, with either cheese, eggs or peanut butter, with a fruit and a yoghurt or Yogi Sip. Her father has type 2 diabetes and her mother suffers from high blood pressure, so Modibedi is cautious about living a healthy lifestyle. She occasionally gives her son R2 to spend at the tuckshop.

● No matter what fruit Michelle* packs for John*, 9, it comes back uneaten, and her 16-year-old son refuses to take a lunchbox to school.

"For the little one I pack a wholewheat sandwich with peanut butter and jam or cheese or chicken mayo. I pack a fruit, but he never eats it. My older son refuses to take lunch to school because it's uncool," she says.

● At just 13, Precious* is 1.5m and already weighs 60kg. Her mom Kgomo* used to pack her lunch, but she now refuses to take a lunchbox. Once an active gymnast at school, she has stopped being active and eats more. "She eats cereal in the morning, but then just takes water and fruit to school. But when she comes home she makes herself food and then eats supper."

Some healthy lunchbox ideas

Registered dietician Brigitte Oswell says children need to eat smaller meals more often. A basic, healthy lunchbox should include starches, protein, fruit, vegetables, dairy products and fluid.

● Starches: wholewheat bread or rolls, pita bread, wraps or pasta

● Protein: skinless chicken, thinly shaved cold meats, tuna, cheese, peanut butter, egg or meatballs

● Dairy: yoghurt, cheese or cottage cheese

● Fluids: water, homemade ice tea or fruit juice

An example of a healthy lunchbox, Oswell says, is a wholewheat sandwich with chicken and light mayonnaise, sliced cucumbers and baby tomatoes, a smoothie made with fresh banana and milk or water, and a bottle of water.

Usher wows wet fans

KUTLWANO OLIFANT

THEY were the lucky ones, the 30 000-odd fans who crammed into Orlando Stadium to see top US R&B singer Usher in the flesh and on stage.

At 9pm on Saturday, the man himself made his entrance dressed in a black Robocop suit.

There had been plenty of rain, and many people had waited from midday to get into into the stadium, but it was worth it.

Not only did the live performance catch the attention of the fans, but Usher's many wardrobe changes kept his female admirers eyeballing his honed physique.

There was more for the ladies when he slipped off his leather jacket and then took off his vest.

Some snapped pictures on their cellphones while others tried to catch a recording of the music.

While he performed songs from his new album,

Usher also entertained the crowd with some of his better-known songs, like My Boo, Let it Burn and Lover and Friends.

"I really didn't like the track Oh My Gosh! before, but after his awesome performance, I fell in love with the song immediately," said Tlotlane Setshele, from Daveyton, Ekurhuleni.

Another admirer in the crowd was Bongzi Ngema-Zuma, the fiancée of President Jacob Zuma, who was spotted at Hansa's hospitality suite.

"The performance was long awaited. We had long waited for him to arrive. He did not disappoint as we had thought the performance would be short. We had fun," said Lindokuhle Windvoel, who attended the concert with her cousin.

Earlier, fans could be seen flocking into the stadium, ignoring the heavy rain that pounded Soweto on Saturday afternoon.

Before Usher's appearance, they were entertained by Hansa's Legends in the Making – Mo and the Dark Knights from Gauteng, Busi M from Western Cape, Shoelace from the Eastern Cape, Mapak'shop from Limpopo, Mo Klaassik from the Free State and Abdus from KwaZulu-Natal.

Local musicians Gang of Instrumentals, Liquideep, Teargas, Zakes Bantwini, Oskido and L-Tido kept the fans in the mood as they danced in the rain.

"It was raining when I started performing but the crowd showed up with much love," said L-Tido.

"I was humbled by the fans – they had so much energy," he added.

Bantwini performed his hit song Clap your Hands, which bowled over many fans in the audience.

"(Saturday night's) performance was one of the best performances I have ever done. I gave the crowd my best. The fans enjoyed it and came in numbers, which was really good," he said.

TV funnyman found hanged in his home

SHAIN GERMANER

ANDREW Thompson's fiercely ironic sense of humour will no longer be bringing smiles to South Africans. He is believed to have committed suicide at the weekend.

His was a face known to fans of Afrikaans comedy across the country, a Kyknet staple who helped produce some of the most successful Afrikaans films and television series of the past 10 years.

Police spokesman Constable Thabo Malatjie said Thompson's body was discovered in his home in Darrenwood, Randburg on Saturday by his girlfriend, hanging lifelessly in his bedroom doorway.

It is believed the 26-year-old had used a necktie to hang himself on Friday. Malatjie said no suicide note had been found and an inquest into the death was set to be conducted.

As news of his death spread yesterday, tributes began pouring in on social networks for the Molly en Wors actor:

IN CHARACTER: Andrew Thompson

"Sending all my love & prayers to Andrew Thompson's loved ones, 1 of South Africa's BEST actors who passed away yesterday! RIP Andrew!" said Jay Werner on Twitter.

"RIP Andrew Thompson. What a sad, sad day for television and film in SA," tweeted fellow fan Janis Ellis.

Thompson had appeared in numerous ads, many of SA's most popular soaps, and a number of theatrical productions and films. Earlier this year, he was nominated for an SA Film and Television Award for his role in the film Roepman.
